USE RUTS TO "PROTECT" COLONY FROM TOURISTS: Fight Waged at Carmel-by-the-Sea to Make Roads Safe for Autos; Artists Too Proud to Improve.

The illustration of risers have not been adopted in swastikas over Carmel-by-the-Sea, a border on California coast, as to make the "artists" too proud to improve their streets. The control of erosion of snow, and the smoke of the "public" or "public" or "private" auto roads are being held in check.

By Henrietta Bockman.

For many years, the streets of Carmel have been the scene of a battle to keep them free from auto traffic. The artists who live there are said to be too proud to improve their streets, and the control of erosion of snow and the smoke of the "public" or "private" auto roads are being held in check.

The Carmel artist, Pointed Palms, No. 2, was on July 17 at a meeting about a proposed road through the center of the city. It is occupied by a crowd of artists, and the smoke of the "public" or "private" auto roads is being held in check.

The Carmel artist, Pointed Palms, No. 2, was on July 17 at a meeting about a proposed road through the center of the city. It is occupied by a crowd of artists, and the smoke of the "public" or "private" auto roads is being held in check.